What are Resin Bound Driveways?

Resin bound driveways are a type of permeable driveway that is made up of a mixture of aggregates and resin. The aggregates are typically gravel or crushed stone, and the resin is a clear, high-strength polymer. The resin binds the aggregates together to create a smooth, seamless surface that is permeable to water. This means that rainwater will drain through the driveway and into the ground, rather than pooling on the surface.

Benefits of Resin Bound Driveways

There are many benefits to choosing a resin bound driveway for your home. Some of the key benefits include:

- Permeability: Resin bound driveways are permeable, which means that rainwater will drain through the driveway and into the ground. This helps to reduce flooding and surface runoff, and can also help to replenish groundwater supplies.
- Durability: Resin bound driveways are very durable and can withstand heavy traffic. They are also resistant to wear and tear, and are less likely to crack or chip than other types of driveways.
- Low-maintenance: Resin bound driveways are very low-maintenance. They do not require sealing or painting, and they can be easily cleaned with a pressure washer.
- Aesthetic appeal: Resin bound driveways are a very attractive option for driveways. They come in a wide range of colours and aggregates, so you can choose a look that complements your home.
